A: I'm not aware of any software which could read the content of a truecrypt volumes. But you could create a gtkdialog to ask the user if he really wants to open the volume in that software. You could then close the dialog when the user confirms. I am playing @a. I can't remember exactly how it works in the game. It is noob friendly. I can't say if it is a good place or not. There will be a training course with instructors who will teach you how to use the tool. There are four slots in the training session and you need to be on a guest level 3 or higher to attend the class. A day pass (250 pesos) will allow you to attend all the training sessions at one place. It is a pretty good deal. Once you have participated in the training you can ask to join the noob team. You are considered a noob until you have played at least 4 times. It is totally noob friendly. There is also an iframe "character" panel in the game that lets you interact with other players. You can create any character you want and you can participate in any type of match (2 vs 2, team, etc.). I have no personal experience with it, but I believe you can register for tournaments. There is also a news section and a chat room where you can meet other players. So you can create any character you want, and I think you can register for tournaments, what about ranking and or ability to play with your friends and I think when you win the tournament you can choose to be in the main game or put you in a separate one (paintball, sports, etc.) Each slot is on a different server and the people in the training have first pick in each slot. If you join the noob team you get priority in the training sessions, so you can get into the slots you want without waiting. [QUOTE=ImTooLazyTo;682777]what is the main game in thie game? I've never played it. What if you want to play with other players in the game? it's only solo?[/QUOTE] there is a mini game where you can try to shoot the other players. but you can do that in the iframe "character" panel. the game is more about bragging about your skill.
