The default main screen should look like this. You should also be able to get the DXWnd Main screen by running dxwnd.exe. This is where you would select the samples to get running on Windows XP. Note that the DXWnd is a Win7 only application so the "dxwnd.exe" file has a compatibility mode to load the Windows 7 version. To make the "dxwnd" sample work on Windows XP, right click on the "dxwnd.exe" file and select "Run As Administrator". The DXWnd sample runs on Windows 7 through Windows Server 2008 R2 and Windows XP. Double click on the "dxwnd.exe" file in the "dxwnd.exe" folder. You should now see a screen similar to the main DXWnd main screen and the samples selection screen. Select DXWnd Sample [1] and press OK. Wait until the samples are loaded. You can now select samples to run on a specific machine. On the DXWnd Main screen, select DXWnd Sample (Visual C++) and press OK. A VStudio window should open. If you select DXWnd Sample (Visual C++) and press OK, it should run a sample of the DXWnd project. Note that you can only run the DXWnd samples in a Visual Studio development environment. You can not use the samples on a computer that is not running Visual Studio. At this time, only 3 samples are available for running on Windows XP and Vista. You can download and try running the DXWnd samples on Windows XP and Vista to get a feel for DXWnd. You can find the downloaded samples at: Downloads Page Conclusion Please note that while we encourage you to try the DXWnd samples on Windows XP and Vista, we are not responsible for the results of your usage of DXWnd. You must fully understand and agree to the terms of the DXWnd License. For questions about DXWnd, please feel free to contact us at DXWnd@microsoft.com.Q: How to get the values of a URL in a string in Ruby I have a string that contains a link like this value="" how can I get the 82157476af
